

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC IN PUERTO Natales

The month of February was marked by a high influx of passengers traveling to Antarctica aboard the National Geographic vessels Orion and Explorer. Additionally, several operational contingencies arose during this period, which allowed passengers extra time to explore the city, its surroundings, and the renowned Torres del Paine National Park. These circumstances provided an opportunity to complement their travel experience by visiting some of the region's main tourist attractions and enriching their journey to the southernmost part of the country.

AURORA EXPEDITIONS

The regional capital also recorded departures to the White Continent with Aurora Expeditions. Likewise, passengers experienced periods of operational contingency, during which they explored the city through walking tours while waiting for a suitable weather window to continue their journey to Antarctica.

CELEBRITY EQUINOX

The city of Punta Arenas received the call of the cruise ship Celebrity Equinox, whose passengers had the opportunity to discover various local attractions through city tours, museum visits, and excursions to the Strait of Magellan Park.

Additionally, excursions were made to various nearby areas, including the Sombras de Fuego, Río de los Ciervos, and Olga Teresa ranches, located outside the urban area. These experiences allowed visitors to become acquainted with the region's natural, cultural, and rural heritage, complementing their stay with a broader perspective of the destination's attractions.
